Project Granite and Staff Movements

As part of MPK’s continuous effort to streamline the business to be effective and efficient, a new initiative focusing on how we can improve the internal systems we use to manage our payroll, time sheeting and rostering requirements has commenced.

Called Project Granite, over the coming months MPK will be undertaking a comprehensive assessment of our current systems to look at ways of achieving better outcomes, particularly with regard to the more effective and accurate payment of our people.

You’ll hear much more detail about Project Granite in a follow up announcement coming out later today, but I wanted to touch base with you all first, to advise of some staff movements on the back of the project’s launch.

Brian Carroll will be heading up Project Granite with immediate effect and will be assisted in this important company-wide initiative by Zoran Milinkov, who will join us next week and provide his extensive expertise in streamlining internal payroll management systems.

In addition to managing Project Granite, Brian will also be joining MPK’s Executive Leadership Team, and I look forward to the immense value he will bring to the company through his new executive position.

With Brian’s departure from his role as IS&T Group Manager, we looked internally to fill this position and Brett Binskin was the most logical choice to take over management of this important company function, given his vast IS&T experience with MPK.

Brett will take on the IS&T Group Manager role with immediate effect.

Please join me in congratulating Brett and Brian on their promotions, and also welcome Zoran when he commences on Project Granite next week.

Folks, Project Granite is an important initiative.

It’s essential we have the very best systems in place right now to provide our people with the high-level payroll certainty they deserve, but also to ensure MPK is set up properly for future growth.

Stay safe,

Adam.
