

Site teams help streamline our payroll system

MPK's Project Granite team was in Roma this week meeting with site teams to work on MPK's major redevelopment of its payroll and rostering system. Earlier this year, Project Granite kicked off the redevelopment by undertaking a full systems review, to clearly identify integration, data capture and rostering issues that our current system had.

Moving forward, the Project Granite team has now started working closely with our site teams to develop a fit-for-purpose and fully integrated system to service all areas of MPK's operations.

Leading Project Granite, Brian Carroll said it was critical that our site-based business administration teams had significant input into the development of MPK's new payroll and rostering system, so we can ensure the end solution works for them and their work crews.

"Put simply, our merger a few years ago to become MPK, resulted in us taking on legacy payroll and rostering systems from new and different business units, which we just couldn't integrate into one company-wide system. We didn't want to just patch those systems up and hope for the best, because ensuring our rostering and payroll systems are paying people properly and promptly is vital to MPK, but most importantly, provides financial certainty for our people.

"So, we decided to invest in a holistic payroll and rostering solution that could service all areas of the business and accommodate the many variables we have with our different workforce scenarios at MPK. We're progressing well to date, and I'm confident that thanks to the input of our site teams, we will be able to develop a new, highly functional and fully integrated payroll and rostering system for initial testing across the company, later this year."

If you have feedback about MPK's payroll and rostering development initiative feel free to contact Brian at brian.carroll@mpckinetic.com.

Project Granite's Brian Carroll (middle) and Alrich Fouche working with GLNG Project Support Officer Tracey Dowdell on the development of a new streamlined payroll system for MPK.

Roma's Senior Office Administrator Regina Evans (r), Commercial Officer Taylah Blake, Business Unit Leader Blair Keetch caught up with Brian Carroll & Alrich Fouche to work on a more effective rostering processes.